September 1, 2017 —Seneca Park Zoo announces the death of Spiderman, the Zoo's 43-year-old male black-handed spider monkey. Spiderman was born in 1974, and came to Seneca Park Zoo from Fort Rickey Game Farm in Rome, NY in 1977. The Zoo is also home to a female spider monkey, Lucy, who was born in 1975.

"For forty years, Spiderman has been an integral part of the Zoo's conservation mission and guest experience," said Larry Sorel, County Zoo Director. "He will certainly be missed and remembered by staff and guests alike."

Spider monkeys have a life expectancy of about 25 years. Spiderman, at 43, was known to be among the oldest black-handed spider monkey in conservation care.

In his long life, Spiderman left quite a legacy. He was the father of 9 offspring, who eventually went to other zoos to start their own families, collectively resulting in 8 second-generation offspring.

Dr. Jeffrey Wyatt D.V.M., the Zoo's Director of Animal Health and Conservation, performed a necropsy which confirmed that Spiderman had terminal cancer.

Native to Central and South America, spider monkeys face many threats including illegal hunting and habitat loss due to logging and deforestation. IUCN rates them as critically endangered.

"Spiderman and his many offspring have inspired generations of Zoo guests to care about and conserve wildlife," said Pamela Reed Sanchez, Executive Director of Seneca Park Zoo Society. "We are dedicated to honoring his memory through educational programs, research, and fundraising that help protect endangered animals."

***Internationally, and in our own backyard, Seneca Park Zoo plays a key role in species survival.
